Buyback and Burn Mechanism

The Palapa token employs a Buyback and Burn mechanism to enhance value for token holders. When the project generates profits, up to 20% of the token supply can be bought back from the market and permanently burned. This reduces the token supply, potentially increasing its scarcity and value over time. The mechanism aligns project profitability with token holder interests, creating a deflationary effect and potential price appreciation. The actual burn amount depends on quarterly profits, with a maximum burn limit of 20% of the token supply.
